KARSHIKKAM- Poly House Project in Association with Seed Project Thrissur

Protected cultivation practices can be defined as a cropping technique wherein the micro climate surrounding the plant body is controlled partially or fully as per the requirement of crops grown during their period of growth. With the advancement in horticulture various types of protected cultivation practices suitable for a specific type of agro-climatic zone have emerged. Among these protective cultivation practices, poly green house, net house, shade house, plastic tunnel & mulching etc. are very useful for Kerala State. Protected cultivation under different types of structures saves plants from winter and extends the cultivation session for off-season crop production. SEED members of Department of social work Christ college Irinjalakuda implemented a poly house agriculture project in association with SEED project Thrissur, total area of the poly house is 30 cents.
